READING

Time: 30 minutes

You are going to read an article about young people and advertising.

Those Crazy Kids

The perception of today's youngsters as media-savvy cynics could hardly be the truth. Instead, this generation of keen consumers may turn witty advertising into an endangered species. Julia Day reports.

The youth of today are cynical media-savvy, seen it all, done it all wouldn't-be-seen-dead-in-the-T-shirt types who appreciate only the most achingly trendy adverts, TV show; and magazines, right? Wrong: that was the last generation.

5 Today's youngsters don't 'get' clever ads, are not in the least suspicious of commercials, don't know the difference between newspapers' political stances, or TV channels, and they don't mind admitting it. In short, they are not half as media, marketing and advertising literate as we might have thought, according to new research commissioned by five media groups.

10 As a result media companies and advertisers are going back to basics to arouse the interest of 15- to 24-year-olds with instant impact messages, plain product pictures, bigger posters, annoying jingles, celebrity endorsements and repetitive ads. Today's youth are a far cry from today's thirtysomethings who grew up as commercially-naive kids.

15 Now a lifetime of MTV, the internet, dawn-till-dusk advertising and PlayStation gaming has created a generation so used to being bombarded with fast- turnover information, they filter it instantly without paying much attention to its meaning. «This is a generation of thoroughbred consumers,» according to Stuart Armon, managing director of company that conducted
20 research into the habits of the nation's youth. «Previous generations were suspicious of advertising, they might have liked ads, but they wouldn't necessarily buy the product. But this generation has been consuming since they were born. They don't see any reason to be suspicious,» says Armon.

25 One young panellist in the focus group research embodied this attitude: «If the advert is good, you think their product will be good because the more they can spend on advertising, the more money they are obviously getting for their product.» Armon says the trend has become more pronounced over the seven years that the continuous tracking study has been running, but has reached a peak in the latest round of interviews with 600 youngsters.

- 30 «Advertising is accepted and expected. Young people don't see anything wrong in being sold to and think that if a product is in a TV ad, it must be good. It's a myth that they are interested in clever ads - they are not willing to decipher complicated messages, they want simple ones. They are looking for an instant message. If it's not there, they don't take any notice.
- 35 And they literally, and naively, believe celebrities in ads really use the products they are advertising,» says Armon. A girl panellist from Birmingham commented: «In some of the Nike ads t they've got all these well-known footballers. You think, 'Oh my God, they've got everybody famous there.' You think it must be good if they want it.»
- 40 The youngsters only read newspapers for the celebrity gossip and sport, rather than news, and couldn't t distinguish between papers' political stances. They also failed to distinguish between TV channels - they access TV through programmes, not channels, for example watching Sky because The Simpsons is on, not because it's Sky.
- 45 The results of the research deeply worry Sid McGrath, planner at an ad agency, but they do not surprise him. «My worry is that the youth of today are not being called upon to flex their intellectual muscles enough,» he says. «There is instant gratification everywhere - in food it's Pot Noodles or vending machines, even their pop icons are one-dimensional figures delivered
- 50 on a plate. Young people are living vicariously through other people's lives and are not asking for much at the moment. A lot of stimulation is lean back' - it doesn't require as much involvement as it used to.»
- He says advertising is changing as a result: «Lots of the most popular ads at the moment are happy, clappy, fun. Easy to digest. They've got no time
- 55 or inclination to decode ads.» One reason behind the shift, McGrath believes, is that young people want relief from the traumas of real life: «Advertising is becoming the opium of the masses rather than the educator.»
